THE EXCEPTIONAL IMAGE OF LVMH AMONG STUDENTS

In 2016 LVMH was for the 11th consecutive year ranked the most attractive employer in France among students at top business and management schools in the Universum France survey. This top ranking recognizes an ambitious Human Resources policy nourished by a unique ecosystem of people whose passion for their Maison and their work figures at the heart of our success.

The ranking is based on responses from over 43,000 students at 127 universities. The students were won over by the diversity of our businesses and métiers, by the Group's impressive number of prestigious companies, and by our geographic reach. The preference expressed by these talents of tomorrow makes LVMH the uncontested leader in terms of employer attractiveness.

LVMH also topped the list of preferred employers in the Trendence 2016 survey of business school students. The Group has held the No. 1 position for the past six years in this ranking, which covered 13,000 management students this year.

A recent survey by WWD recognized LVMH as well. The magazine asked over 400 students at U.S. and European fashion and merchandising schools, along with 2,000 followers on the magazine's social networks, to choose the most desired company to work for in fashion. Respondents ranked LVMH number two.

“The world leader in luxury, LVMH has reaffirmed its ability to attract and develop recent graduates. We are very proud of this continued confidence, which motivates us to do even more. Talented people have a choice of employers, and we strive every day to create a stimulating, international working environment inspired by the strong, tangible values of creativity and innovation, entrepreneurial spirit and excellence. Students clearly recognize that our ecosystem of 70 Houses is uniquely rich in this regard,” notes Chantal Gaemperle, LVMH Group Executive Vice President, Human Resources and Synergies.
